Foreign body ingestion is the most common cause of gastrointestinal perforation in children, with the most common sites of perforation being the pylorus and duodenum. We report the case of a 9-month-old girl with multiple injuries sustained when a glass bottle was ingested, who was hospitalized for more than 6 months. While the diagnosis of a foreign body is often based on plain radiographs, other imaging techniques, including computed tomography, nuclear medicine, and ultrasonography, may be needed to visualize foreign
