1. Import or open an image. In the Adobe suite of applications, you can find the Photoshop Organizer under the Photoshop folder. Under the Organizer window, look for an Open window. If you are in the Adobe suite of applications, select File⇒Open or press Ctrl+O (Windows) or . The Photoshop Organizer opens with a large display of an image, as shown in Figure 7-1, left. Figure 7-1: The Organizer window provides a convenient place to open and organize images for editing and publishing. You can open a folder of images by selecting Open from the Organizer menu or by using the keyboard shortcut Ctrl+O (Windows) or . Files are displayed in an open folder within the Organizer window. You can open an image from within the Organizer by double-clicking to bring up the Open image dialog box. After you have chosen the image you want to open, check the box to Include image in the folder it is in and press the Open button. Photoshop opens the image into an editable area in the center of the Organizer window. Note that the Organizer window displays the image at its original size and location in the file system as the Organizer window in Figure 7-1, right. If you choose to open a folder of images, check the box to Include images in the folder in the Organizer, as shown in Figure 7-2, and press the Open button. Photoshop displays each image that's in the folder and opens each one into an editable area in the center of the Organizer window. Figure 7-2: Double-click to open an image. 2. Select the Layers palette by pressing Ctrl+Alt+L (Windows) or +Option+L (Mac). 3. To create a new layer, select the New Layer icon at the bottom of the Layers palette. 4. Using a selection tool, drag an object from the original image onto a new layer. 5. When a color overlay appears, use the Move tool to drag it into the right position over the new layer. 6. Repeat steps 2 and 3 to create more layers. Try not to drag through more than one layer at a time because Photoshop, as you see later in this book, can automatically merge overlapping layers

Q: Send email to a service I want to create a web app that sends an email, to a system service (apparently a Windows service). I'm having a hard time finding an API for doing that. In a simple scenario the app needs to: have access to an address list the possibility to send either a plain text or html message the ability to modify the content of the mail So far my only plan of action is to call on the underlying system's SMTP server. But I want to do it in a way so that if the server is not able to handle the request for any reason it will at least try again after some time (without user interaction). I'm trying to avoid calls to a 3rd party service, but haven't found a good way to implement it yet. Any idea? A: If you have .net 4.0 you can use the MailMessage class. MailMessage mail = new MailMessage(SmtpFrom,To,subject,body); mail.IsBodyHtml = true; mail.Subject = subject; mail.Body = body; smtp.Send(mail); The code is from the MSDN, but they also have the snippet you need to include in your project. Dear Chess.com members: Thank you for your continued support of Chess.com. I know that Chess.com is very important to many of you, and I have enjoyed working with you all. As you may have heard, we are closing down Chess.com as of July 7. I have received many questions since May about what will become of the Chess.com name. It is important for you to know that, while I am relieved to close the business end of Chess.com, I am not closing Chess.com. The name and the brand are going to new owners, and as we witness the evolution of Chess.com I am looking forward to sharing my passion for and love of chess with new people. I have already met many new friends that I will still be in touch with in one form or another. I am very happy to announce that for the better part of the last twenty years, Chess.com has been operated by FIDE, the world chess body. Today, after many years of discussion, we are delighted
