The present invention relates to a transfer type diffuser, and more particularly to an improved structure of a diffuser having an open-topped mounting member mounted to a wall or the like. A known diffuser which is mounted to a wall or the like, as disclosed in Japanese Patent Laid-Open Publication No. 2007-5694, is constructed such that a mounting member with a rectangular opening is mounted in a hole bored in a wall or the like, and an open-topped concave diffuser member is fitted within the mounting member. The diffuser member is provided with an arc-shaped suction port formed in the inside of the concave diffuser member. The arc-shaped suction port is provided with a plurality of arc-shaped holes formed at the suction port, which holes are provided with a connecting part of the mounting member. When the diffuser is mounted on a wall or the like, the arc-shaped suction port is coupled with a suction port of a blower through a coupling member, such as a hose, and when the blower is operated, air is forcibly discharged to the inside of the diffuser through the suction port, resulting in the generation of wind. However, a conventional diffuser suffers from the following problems. Since the diffuser is disposed in a hole formed in a wall or the like, even if the wall is a metallic wall, the wall will probably be damaged by the fastening of the coupling member. In addition, since
