Funkeys game that was released in 1961. It does not appear that the various versions were marketed in the U.S. Hepatitis C screening practices among rural and urban primary care providers. To determine self-reported screening and treatment practices for hepatitis C virus (HCV) infection among rural and urban primary care providers (PCPs). A cross-sectional survey was administered to 150 PCPs in Iowa. Questionnaires assessed self-reported HCV screening and treatment practices by primary care provider (PCP) practice characteristics, current and previous HCV patients, and the current and previous use of a PCP referral-letter template. Most respondents (91%) reported performing some sort of HCV screening of patients. Compared with their urban counterparts, fewer PCPs in rural practice environments reported performing a test for hepatitis B and were less familiar with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention guidelines for HCV screening. Only one half of respondents reported receiving information about HCV screening (including the link to the referral-letter template) during their educational program in HCV. Fewer PCPs reported using a referral-letter template or linking the template to the electronic medical record. Few rural PCPs reported using a referral-letter template, and even fewer used the template to link the template to the electronic medical record. The majority of providers reported using basic screening practices for HCV. Future efforts should seek to increase access to PCPs and reduce disparities in HCV screening practices.
