(Newser) – Robert Cornish was convicted in 1984 of a crime he denies committing: using a time-delayed camera to photograph his then-girlfriend in the nude and then trying to throw the pictures away. But rather than spend decades in prison, Cornish got a slight reprieve on Tuesday when a federal judge granted him a retrial on what he'd describe as a technicality, the Los Angeles Times reports. The Times notes that previous rulings have said that there's "no right to an appeal at the state level in federal court on the basis of a federal court's decision to grant or deny a petition for habeas corpus." Cornish's attorney says the New Jersey Superior Court's denial of the habeas petition was based on incorrect law. Cornish's attorney, Nathan Schacht, is quoted by the Times as saying, "it's been a nightmare for Mr. Cornish." Cornish, who is now 65, is facing a sentence of up to 10 years behind bars after his retrial. He faces sentencing in December and the result will be decided upon the specific charges at that time.The practical aspects of panic disorder. Panic disorder is a common problem that can have a major effect on patient's quality of life. It is one of the most undertreated psychiatric disorders. It is likely that the high percentage of nonadherence to medication and therapy of patients with panic disorder reflects the fact that the majority of those with this disorder may not develop symptoms severe enough to require the use of medication or formal treatment. The author reviews reasons for patient nonadherence and suggests that patients with panic disorder who are nonadherent to their medications may be a distinct subtype of those with panic disorder. Using physical symptoms as surrogates, the author proposes that this subtype may be identified using a cognitive-behavioral model of panic that focuses on dysfunctional cognitions. He suggests that this is a distinct disorder that can be clinically differentiated from panic 570a42141b
