Q: Cannot access using remote desktop Vmware Player 6.5 I have a ESXi virtual machine which has an RDP connection and I have configured it as a server. I can reach to the VM via the hypervisor network. I have done some changes to the firewall and allowed some exceptions and forwarded ports. I can telnet to the Server from my host machine. I have configured a port-forwarding and I can access the server by using telnet localhost 1494, port-forwarded port and I get prompted for the username and password. My issue is when I try to access the server from my local machine using the port-forwarded or the direct telnet to the VM it gives me an error: "Connection refused". I have unbound the VM as well, but still I get the same error. Can someone help me on this? I am new to Vmware and I would appreciate some help. Thanks in advance. A: Here is what I did to resolve the problem: I created a new host-only network and added the vmware client to that. I also set it to bridged and added it to an active directory domain. Q: Node.js: Easiest way to reload socket.io (socket.io-client?) I am trying to rebuild a chat-style app using node.js + socket.io + web sockets. Currently, the server is receiving messages from the client and storing them in a database and I have it live on my site at It works great. However, I am attempting to rebuild the app to be a "game" style type of app where the client is storing the data (presumably in a local database) and thus the server does not need to poll the client. I have the first part of this being built but I can't seem to find out how to reload socket.io-client, or more importantly, the server. In the old version, I had the following line in my server script: io = io.listen(server); This allowed me to call io.sockets.socket(socketId).emit('message') to transmit the message to the current socket. If I could change the "io" variable, it'd be great, but I was unable to make it work in

Imagine I have some field on a class that has a null reference on the object itself. Can I know when I access this object if it's null or undefined or not? Object.prototype.foo = 'bar'; var obj = {foo: null}; alert(obj.foo) If obj.foo is null, I want it to return undefined on the object so that in the alert box it shows up as bar, if not it returns null. A: You can add a getter and setter to the prototype of the constructor. This will overwrite the reference and all the methods on the instance will run the getter/setter: var obj = {foo: null}; Object.defineProperty(obj, 'foo', { get(){ return this._foo; }, set(foo){ this._foo = foo; } }) alert(obj.foo) // -or- alert(obj._foo) Q: What's the difference between $(M\times N)^{[M]}\times N^{\{N\}}$ and $(M\times N)^{M}\times N^{N}$?
