Aug 22, 2019 dabyne 885a8ec2a4 Reply. Sep 21, 2020 I want to check the numbers from the output of strace. The numbers are in hexadecimal like the output of strace output. I have to get the number from the text field of the output of the strace. Can anyone please tell me how to get the number from the text field of the output of the strace of a command? I am using the following command to strace the program: ./portraitpluginforphotoshopcs3with32 The output is in the form of a text field called traces, containing multiple lines, where each line has the string from my program. A: I don't know of a way to get just the numbers, but there are plenty of ways to get the string/text in the output: #!/bin/bash while read -r line do echo ${line:0:10} done will print the first 10 characters of a line. If you must have a number, and you really don't want to parse the text, then using awk may be simplest: #!/bin/bash while read -r line do echo ${line:0:10} done | awk '{print $1}' Output: caitraff BONUS You can also simplify this with awk a little bit if you're only interested in the first character of each line. #!/bin/bash while read -r line do echo ${line:0:1} done | awk '{print substr($0,0,1)}' Output: caitraff Q: Why is Bipartite Graphs a NP-Complete? Wikipedia says: Bipartite graphs are the graphs that have no odd hole or antihole. Why is that? If I can show that there is no odd hole in a bipartite graph then I can prove this is NP-Complete. But I don't understand how a bipartite graph with an odd hole is a counterexample to this. A: If you have an odd hole, you'll need to visit two vertices
