CRMdynamic is a CRM(Customer Relationship Management) application which is designed for different needs of small and medium sized companies. CRMdynamic is a stand-alone application and does not required any database to be added. CRMdynamic has an easy-to-learn interface and is very intuitive for the users. The developed CRMdynamic is easy to use for both database beginners and professionals. As well as the designing of CRMdynamic is based on HTML, it is completely menu driven and is designed to be used on any internet browser (PC, Mac, and Android). CRMdynamic is equipped with Database wizard, user defined list and predefined custom form functionality, customization of the look and feel of user interface and any other features of the user's requirements. Its web form management feature allows CRMdynamic to be used as a standalone solution or integrated with other CRM systems. CRMdynamic has a very large audience that has been waiting for a product like this. CRMdynamic is developed on the top of ASP.Net 2.0 and SQL server 2000 and 2008. This application will be the perfect solution for CRM for company website. CRMdynamic also provides an SQLite database that can be integrated with a number of mobile platforms. CRMdynamic is easy to install and use. With CRMdynamic it's easy for the user to utilize and view reports, keep track of the customers and quickly run queries and export the data. This is working well, except that it needs to be run every time I update the application – so I keep a copy of the svn working copy on the production server, and manually copy it to the file system on the test server before every test. That is my problem exactly – have to manually update it, and it takes time (a few minutes in my case) to build the site and open the master file and then update the working copy to the master file. EDIT - yes I have disabled "synchronize changes from working directory" in the web.config, but I still have to rebuild to update the working copy. This is working well, except that it needs to be run every time I update the application – so I keep a copy of the svn working copy on the production server, and manually copy it to the file system on the test server before every test

What's New In?

Integrio Uptime Scout monitors the availability of supervised websites and notifies users if their servers are up or down.

Basic graphical user interface
The layout of the application is reduced to only two tabs: one shows the present servers that are being supervised and the other allows basic settings to be tweaked. Users can add websites in the tracking list via '+' and '-' symbols, and can get servers tested via the small lightning symbol next to the 'test log' list. Every major feature of this program is extremely accessible and visible. You are allowed to set up and store authentication parameters (username and password) for the target server, build up a list with the servers that you want to keep an eye on, as well as edit or delete servers. Simple but effective features Integrio Uptime Scout allows users to be notified of website status changes via different options. Popup messages and sound alerts are some of the supported notifications. In case servers fail, users can introduce a command to be executed automatically on the first or every failed attempt to connect to servers. Commands can also run third-party tools that will elaborate the problem. E-mails can be added on the list of notifications in case a broader audience needs to know the current server status. The monitoring frequency is variable. Users can set it for 5 minutes or 30 seconds, and can change the timeout period manually from the default of 60 seconds. Additionally, users can connect to servers via a URL, or add a proxy port or a proxy address. Conclusion Integrio Uptime Scout offers basic yet efficient monitoring capabilities. It has several notification methods, and can run third-party apps automatically in case a server shutdown occurs. Users can be notified in many ways that include local sound and popup alerts, while e-mails can be sent to various addresses in case more people need to be kept in touch with the overall situation.
