With some tough fighting today, the Republican Party continued to hold the House of Representatives, although it is expected that the Democrats have taken control of the Senate. However, it is clear that political tides are shifting, with many pundits claiming to predict a possible shift to the right in the coming years. The Republican Party and the Democratic Party have both recognized their need to enact change in order to survive. While the next several years are not expected to yield any decisive changes, some Republicans are hoping to enact some policies that were not very popular during the Bush years, when they controlled the Presidency, the House, and the Senate. While some states are expected to continue with moderate to conservative policies, conservative policies have taken a foothold in some areas. However, there are a great deal of political shifts taking place. Whether or not these predictions will come to fruition remains to be seen. Yes, will President Obama be re-elected? Will he push through with plans for healthcare reform? These are the questions that you and your family should be asking yourselves right now. Many people have seen or experienced the game many of us play - politics. The game itself has changed, and the way we play is changing. The candidates, party platforms, and sound-byte rhetoric are all changing. Your family and friends know how to play the game, but most of the rest of the world does not. How should you, as a voter, play the game? How can we continue to play this game effectively? Here are some tips and tricks from the Top 40 in Politics series:
