Pilot-scale bioreactor aided recycling of paper and construction debris. Recycling of paper and construction wastes is a cost effective and an environmentally friendly solution for keeping our natural resources to use for next generation. Herein, a pilot-scale bioreactor (BioDac) device has been developed to separate and recover useful compounds from paper and construction debris. BioDac device is equipped with a second generation biodistillation unit and a hydrodechlorination reactor. Paper and construction wastes are made into a suspension in a recycle water. The components in wastewaters are drawn out using a vacuum pump and recycled as the recycle water for the biodistillation unit. The hydrodechlorination reactor is fed with the recycle water from the biodistillation unit. The biodistillation unit separated ca. 0.2-0.4 g of chlorophyll from 250 g of recycling paper waste. An extensive organic solvent analysis of the biodistillation unit showed that a majority of the chlorophyll was extracted into the organic phase, and the percentage of chlorophyll was enhanced with an increase in the recycle water flow rate. This is because the recycle water circulation rate regulates the diffusivity of liquid for the degradation of toxic substances in the biodistillation unit. The dechlorination reactor continuously removes oxygenated compounds including CO, CO₂, and alcohols from the hydroxylated waste water through the iron-catalyzed reaction. The recycled water from the dechlorination reactor was of similar quality to the original pure water. Therefore, it would be an

Software Requirements: Disclaimer: I have yet to own a GPD PC, but I have heard nothing but great things about the product. If you want a PC that can run Windows, but doesn't take long to figure out Linux, this is your ticket! The build quality is excellent, and I'm sure that once the early issues are fixed, this will become one of the top choices for mini-PC builds. GPD Win 2 GTX 970 4GB DDR4 Windows 10 64-bit 2.5" SSD
