If you're using Photoshop to create graphics for the Web, you will need to create images with high-resolution pixel dimensions (D1, D3, D4, D5, D6, and so on). Check out Chapter 3 for tips on how to create pixels in Photoshop. In addition to blending layers, you can use Photoshop's additional image processing and editing tools. Some are beyond the scope of this book, but I include information on using various tools that appear in the Kit shortly. When you experiment with Photoshop, you may end up asking yourself whether you need to use a professional computer or a more modest computer. If you're a professional, a PC is fine. But for personal use, a Mac — because of the OS — is a good choice for some tasks. Check out Chapter 3 for more information on choosing a computer for your Photoshop projects. Finding out what Photoshop can do for you Photoshop's comprehensive feature set enables you to transform a simple photo into a digital canvas for expressing your creativity to stunning effect. Before you can create stunning new images, however, you need to get to know Photoshop. Although the program is intuitive, you may need to use it at times to see what you want to create. Photoshop is part of Adobe Systems. Some plugins enable you to use Photoshop inside of other applications, like Illustrator and InDesign. In addition to the Photoshop/InDesign plugin and the Photoshop plug-in for Fireworks, Photoshop and Fireworks are the only Adobe suite applications where the two work together. (As I note in the preceding section, InDesign makes use of the Adobe Illustrator program.) Figure 1-1 illustrates what Photoshop can do. Photoshop provides the tools for creating, editing, and manipulating images. You can use these tools to eliminate colors or change them to another color; stretch or compress an image; crop an image so that it presents only part of an object; or retouch a section of the image. The following list describes some of the more important features of Photoshop: Blending: For example, you can mix colors, adjust color, lighten and darken colors, and create and blend textures to blend them with background color. I use blending to remove unwanted texture and color from images so that they look like a gallery wall. (See Chapters 3 and 4 for information on blending and other image effects.) Curves: The Curves dialog box enables you to select a range of values

Set in a majestic lakeside vineyard, this design-driven villa in the heart of the famous region of Tuscany boasts four ensuite bedrooms, over 500 square meters of living space and three terraces on a hillside of gushing crystal clear water. While Caprice Design has over the past 40 years been creating luxurious residences with the innovative spirit of the Californian surf scene, they've decided to make their boutique villa in Tuscany home to the owner and their dog Gracie and start all over again. The 18th-century barn conversion is the perfect way to blend contemporary design with that of the ancient past. The original structure was handcrafted with its family pride and a focus on detail: carefully made windows, beautifully crafted cabinets and furniture, architectural detailing, and artworks on the walls. In keeping with the architectural feeling, they even preserved the stone-clad and wooden floor in their barn-like living spaces. The master suite is split from the main living area and sits on a panoramic balcony. It is a quiet, private oasis, with views to a beautiful landscape and the sparkling waters of the lake below. The three other guest rooms and the common living area are separated by a set of sliding doors from one another, to share the cool and breezy spaciousness of the living room and dining area. And though they had this space as their home, the owners maintained a firm focus on comfort, simplicity, and the use of natural materials. A roaring fire is in the center of the living room, which boasts floor to ceiling windows with views of the lake. The original rock walls are still there too, but walls have been extended and topped with Brazilian beach boards: minimalistic and modern, but still connecting to the ancient and the organic. The home's new owners, built-in their 60s, have brought with them high technology, a sense of design, and a need to live well. The owners have searched for high-end materials and furniture for their living spaces. The new master bedroom is dressed in an all-white color palette, with a built in shelving unit for clothes and mirror above the dressing table. There is an ensuite bathroom and a separate guest bathroom which contains a bathtub surrounded by a wall of either pebbles or stone. Beneath is the living room, where a large fireplace creates a central
