Using Photoshop's layers is very different from using GIMP, but fortunately, you don't need to work with layers as much as you do in GIMP because Photoshop provides many features you can use to enhance your image without using layers. How to use this chapter To get the most out of this chapter, follow these steps to set up your Photoshop workspace. I recommend that you open a blank document and get your work started. 1. If you're not already working from a template, prepare a blank file by creating a new document. Click the New Layer button (it looks like a two-headed arrow) and choose the appropriate template. Alternatively, if you're working with your own images, create a new layer. 2. When you've completed preparing your work, save the file as a new Photoshop document. Photoshop has a Save As dialog box. Click the File tab and choose Save As. The Save As dialog box appears. 3. In the Save As dialog box, enter a new name for the file. When you create a new file, you'll have the option to create a new name for your file. This gives you an opportunity to save your work under a different name if you prefer. 4. Select JPEG File Type from the Format drop-down menu. If you're using a different file type, select it in the same manner. 5. Change the file name if you'd like. Keep in mind that the file name will appear in the Save As dialog box. 6. Click the Save button. You return to the Photoshop window. 7. Add your desired adjustments to the image by using the steps in "Creating a High-Quality Grayscale TIFF Image" earlier in this chapter. 8. Close the file when you're done editing. Photoshop may produce warnings when it's time to save. Ignore them because this is a new document and the warnings aren't going to affect your project. Creating a High-Quality Grayscale TIFF Image A TIFF file has the ability to hold any number of layers. A TIFF file is a raster format, which means that it only holds bits of color. Layers enhance the quality of your image by allowing you to mask out parts of your image to keep from editing specific parts of your picture. The next few steps show you how to

Q: Where is the GoogleCalendar API for Java? I'm trying to get an understanding of Google Calendar data using Java, specifically how to manage calendar events. All examples I can find (such as Google Calendar Java (New)) include a call to GoogleCalendarService. However, that no longer seems to work -- the CalendarService seems to require a server key. The documentation for that says: The key that identifies your application to Google servers, typically not appended to your web page address. (The name is the only part of the URL that is case-sensitive.) See your developer console to find the URL you have registered. (under the heading Getting an OAuth 2.0 token from Google) However, that link returns a 404 not found. So it looks like the service has been discontinued and I can't find a reference for how to use it. Is there any way to continue to use it? I'm concerned that if I started using it I might suddenly find it impossible to stop. A: As of 1 April 2018 the Google Calendar API has been deprecated. You should use the Google Calendar API V3. See: If you want to get the old service use keycloak to auth with Google: FILED NOT FOR PUBLICATION MAR 22 2016

The distance along the edge of the canvas the brush will move when you click it determines the size of the brush. You can also click and drag along an edge of the image to copy a row or column of pixels.
