Q: how to store dates in mysql database I want to store dates in the database, so how can I store them in the following format yyyy-mm-dd and retrieve them in the same format. Please guide me. A: Using the MySQL built-in date & time functions MySQL's date and time handling can be quite complex and is covered in detail in the manual here A simplified method of storing the date in the database to provide fast retrieval is to convert the string date into a MySQL datetime by using the STR_TO_DATE function. STR_TO_DATE(string_val, format) where format can be a string such as : YYYY-MM-DD or YYYY-MM-DD hh:mi:ss A: You can't really store dates in database so much as a string. You can then convert the string to an actual date when you want to do any calculations. For example, a date column would be type date and have a value like '2008-07-15'. If you want to have a column with all the dates that have happened, you'll want to create a table with the column and another called IDENTITY. This way you can keep track of when you entered the table, so you can say if you've entered or modified that column since that time. The issue with storing dates in a database is that they can easily be made invalid and broken by future changes to SQL engines or even for changing OS.
