* Open After Effects project and locate and open the CinemaDNG file. * The CinemaDNG file containing your video stream is imported into After Effects as a video clip. * Play back the video clip. * You have one video clip per image, in one of two encoding formats (MXF or DNG): 1. MXF files 2. JPEG-encoded DNG files * Export the clip as a video-ready AE project. * You now have a video clip and/or video stream that you can edit and/or enhance in AE as you wish. * Save the project. * All changes to the imported clip are stored in the original DNG file. So you can re-import the file at any time to see all updates, changes or simply revert back to the original file. Check out CinemaDNG on YouTube to get a better understanding of the format: The AE DNG (Digital Negative) file format is the successor to CinemaDNG. It offers a similar set of editing and enhancement tools. The MOV format is designed for storing high-resolution image streams in camera raw format. MOV is an open, documented format leveraging standard formats for video and imaging MOV, H264, XMVC, WAV. Each image is encoded using the MOV image format. The image stream can be stored in one of two formats: either as video essence in an XMV file, or as a sequence of image files in a file directory. What's New In?

* Upscale decompresses the individual images contained in the files, * Averages all the images together to generate a single data stream, * Downscales the single data stream to match the output required by the After Effects and Premiere Pro software. Other features: * You can set a maximum file size for the output as a separate setting. * You can select to encode the images with the TIFF/EP video codec. * You can change the output image format between DNG, TIFF, TIFF/EP, MXF, XMP. * If you would like to manually set the maximum duration of the output, you can, but it will be ignored. * You can set the container of the output. The default setting is encoded to MXF, but you can also select to encode the output to TIFF, TIFF/EP, or XMP. * The output quality can be set to high (4k), medium (3k) and low (2k). * The output file format can be selected between DNG, TIFF, TIFF/EP, MXF, XMP. * The output file format can be encoded to TIFF, TIFF/EP, MXF, XMP. In Version 1.0, the geometry of the output is managed on a fly by means of the generation of preview images. Thus, you can adjust the zoom and rotation. See the video tutorial for a demonstration: Version 1.1 - In this version of CinemaDNG Importer for After Effects CS4 and Premiere Pro CS4 you will find: * A "max duration" setting. If you have a large sequence of images, you can set the maximum duration for the output file. * Export preset selection. You can now export the preset list as a CSV file. * Export the AE settings as XML. This allows you to change the settings if you have to! * A comprehensive help file. * Autosave. You can now save to disk when changing settings. * A French translation. * Version 1.1 of the CinemaDNG Importer plug-in for After Effects CS4 and Premiere Pro CS4 uses the same settings as Version 1.0.
