CYDON ■ ► Korean ■ ► English SOURCE: More links about the game: the Electronic Health Record to Identify the Environmental Causes of Adolescent Chronic Kidney Disease: A Case Study. The demographic and disease burden of adolescents with chronic kidney disease (CKD) in the United States has been increasing. Detailed epidemiologic studies of this population are lacking. We investigated whether CKD-related electronic health record (EHR) data could be utilized to identify the environmental causes of adolescent CKD. We employed EHR data, including billing and laboratory data, to compare the prevalence of environmental exposures in two adolescent CKD populations, those with and without hypertension. We also combined EHR data with validated self-administered questionnaires, including those to evaluate obesity, diet, and alcohol use. In total, there were 300 adolescents, all of whom had an estimated glomerular filtration rate less than 90 mL/min/1.73 m(2), who consented to participate in this study. Twenty of them had hypertension and 260 did not. The anthropometric measures of obesity and changes in diet were not significantly different between the 2 groups. The prevalence of obesity in this study was 4.5%. Alcohol intake was not related to CKD. The prevalence of smoking was 2.9%. We combined EHR data with self-administered questionnaires to evaluate alcohol use, diet, and obesity. The presence of hypertension was a strong predictor of CKD among non-Hispanic white adolescents with obesity (odds ratio, 1.89; 95% confidence interval, 1.04-3.44). This analysis showed that overweight, high sodium intake, and hypertension may cause CKD. This study suggests that identifying environmental causes of CKD in adolescent patients will help in the prevention of progressive renal disease.3.07.2009 We are starting our year out with a bang.
