Before introducing the feature, EA Sports made the announcement that the PES 2018 boot data will be recorded from the players' feet, allowing the players' feet to interact with the ball – a first for a PES boot. (Editor's note: PES does not use the same motion data at the back of the player or the back of the boot as a result of a long-standing licensing agreement with NOWL, EA Sports' supplier of ground-truth data, but PES 2018 will be the first title in recent years to truly allow feet to interact with the ball.) The boot motion data is used across all of the ball's digital and physical interactions in PES 2018, as well as in the new physics features. The newly introduced motion data has also been used across all of the other ball-related features. Just like in FIFA 17, the clubs have now also been reimagined and configured to be more believable, complete and authentic and they will be powered by the same motion data. Here are a few screenshots that highlight the new motion-capture data featured in PES 2018: New Highlighths The ball more accurately reflects the action of the game, meaning that there are fewer compromises in terms of ball control and the ball swings differently when kicked. This means that shots have a huge level of pace and accuracy, while you can also find yourself unloading shots with instant long-range finishes. New Shot Instructions and the role of the assists Player action, assists and off-the-ball runs (assist) have been reconsidered in-depth. In addition, players now naturally split off to create space and time for other players to get into the penalty area by dropping deeper to receive the ball. The behaviour of the player has been added to the ball, so that they can lift it away to create free space and time for a team-mate. In addition, the ball is now better at recognising individual players so that it naturally gives space for others. New 'boost' flicks The boost flicks that are used to vary the speed of the ball can be more easily controlled and more consistently used with the ball. This is not only advantageous for dribbling and passing, but it also improves ball control and enhances the player's feel for the game and their positioning. In
