The establishment of stroke centers equipped with modern interventional therapies is currently a major goal of healthcare systems. However, it is well known that "overtriage" is a common issue in the management of acute ischemic stroke. Here, we retrospectively compared three guideline-based mechanical thrombectomy strategies, defined by the availability of a stent retriever and a mechanical thrombectomy catheter. We retrospectively reviewed patients with acute ischemic stroke who were treated by mechanical thrombectomy within 12 hours of symptom onset, and managed by the three different guideline-based strategies. We then analyzed clinical and angiographic outcomes. Among 1419 patients, we analyzed 441 patients treated by the guideline-based mechanical thrombectomy strategies. Baseline characteristics and the proportion of standard-dose intravenous alteplase were similar between the three groups. The group treated with the combination of the stent retriever and the mechanical thrombectomy catheter had better clinical outcomes. 34.7% versus 25.2% and 18.3%, p by 9? 4 d0c515b9f4
