Knowing about the different panels While you can use the program from any window, Adobe Photoshop makes heavy use of different panels. Figure 14-1 shows you a few of the most important panels you need to know about in Photoshop. The Tools panel is the most used and important panel in the program. It contains tools and other options that enable you to perform different editing and retouching functions on a picture. You can also use the panel's zoom controls, specify a color swatch, create a new layer, and add a layer mask, as well as view layers and objects. As shown in Figure 14-1, the Tools panel is at the top of the window. You can switch to other panels by pressing either the T (tear off) or the Q (quadrant) keys. If you want to see a tutorial on how to use the Tools panel, see Chapter 18. Figure 14-1: The Tools panel is used for editing and retouching a picture. The Layers panel shows all the layers that are in your document. Each layer has a layer name, which is the title you give the layer. The layers are where you create different elements of your image, such as the sky, buildings, or people, or any other area that you want to add to the picture. Layers are a great way to organize and organize your image. You can create as many layers as you want and assign different effects or even create filter effects to each layer. You can see the layers in the Layers panel by selecting the appropriate panel menu option (choose Window⇒Layers to view the Layers panel) and selecting the menu command listed next to each layer (Photoshop CS4 and later). The Layers panel is the most important panel for editing and retouch

Q: Random Access to javascript array element using onmouseover I have some elements on my page which are rather heavy. In order to improve the user experience I'd like to have this elements (a few times) loaded into the javascript array of my javascript application. Once the array is loaded, I need a way to get the element at position n in the array. So the random access method would be the one I need. I found my quite a lot of ajax solutions to get the element at position n in the array. Most use 1 or 2 requests. So I'm looking for a solution that uses just one request (maybe more if that makes any difference). I do not mind if the element is being requested from the server each time I hover over my element or not. My container looks something like this: `var containers = [{container: '#container1', content: 'AAAAA', x:12, y:23}, {container: '#container2', content: 'BBBBB', x:42, y:13}, {container: '#container3', content: 'CCCCC', x:90, y:43},]`
`jQuery(document).ready(function($) { $.get('containers.json', function(data) { // TODO: Now initialise the array. }); });` Can anyone give me any hint what I could search for, how I could do that or if I am missing something? Thanks a lot! A: I've implemented this in my app before to add items to an Array a few times with one request. It runs on the parent node of the elements to be added. The method I use creates a new element, adds the data, sets the innerHTML and adds the element to a queue. `/ * Listener for hovering over a container element. * @return false if the onmouseover event handler is canceled, true otherwise. */ function addToList(container) { var node = document.createElement("li"); node.innerHTML = container.innerHTML; container.appendChild(node); queue.push(node); return true; } /`
