Fallout From Global Poker Tour Incident Leads to Uproar The fallout from the February incident between Barry Tchilinghirian and Jason Mercier continues. The issue stems from the incident, but more from the chaos that the World Series of Poker has had to deal with in the aftermath of the incident. If you've followed what's happened so far, you'll know that tournament director Ty Stewart was fired after allegations he'd told Tchilinghirian to leave the World Series of Poker's events were proven to be true. Stewart is now under a state's investigation for the incident. Micky Arison, owner of the World Series, also made some comments in the aftermath of the incident, with Tchilinghirian saying the CEO was a "puppet" for Stewart. No Communication from Stewart Following that incident, Stewart did not return to the World Series of Poker. Arison said that Stewart would be on hand at the Spring Championship in Las Vegas, but no word on any other plans yet. Fast forward two months to April 23, which was the last day Stewart was on official duty with the World Series. He had communication contact with the WSOP twice, although they didn't last very long. He was contacted once between 9 and 9:30 p.m. and another time between 2:30 and 3 a.m. the following day. This apparently was before some of the more serious allegations were made against him, but Stewart did not answer either phone call. Since then, Stewart has told WSOP chief operating officer Chris Graub that he has no intention of returning to the WSOP. WSOP Has Issues to Deal With It's not just Stewart that has come under fire. Multiple players have made their opinion of the incident clear, as well as the WSOP's handling of the situation. Others have made their opinion clear that they find the situation to be very unfair. Graub has told the media that the WSOP has not yet finished dealing with the situation, as the allegations have only just hit the public eye. However, he did say that Stewart would be stepping down as tournament director and that someone else would be put in charge. Graub also said that no one has been suspended at this point. Part of that may come from the fact that Stewart denied having any direct role

The present invention relates to a liquid crystal apparatus and more particularly to a transreflective liquid crystal apparatus which is used in a reflection type or a transmission type. The transreflective liquid crystal apparatus comprises a pair of transparent substrates disposed to oppose each other with a liquid crystal layer interposed therebetween. A portion on an inner surface of one of the transparent substrates is partially coated with a reflecting member to form a reflecting surface. In order to effectively utilize this apparatus, it is necessary to make the brightness of the illuminating apparatus as high as possible so as to obtain a high display quality. Conventionally, a back light (for example, a cold cathode lamp) is used as an illuminating apparatus. The brightness of the back light can be made high, thus the display quality can be improved. However, there are the following problems. The consumed power of the back light is large. The service life is short. The illuminating apparatus must be large-sized in accordance with the number of pixels. As a liquid crystal apparatus which solves these problems, a display apparatus is proposed in Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication No. 6-92003. In this liquid crystal apparatus, a reflecting film is formed on the outer surface of one of the transparent substrates, and both the reflecting film and the transparent substrate are sealed with a sealing member. As a back light, a white LED which emits light from the top is used. The white LED radiates a white light which is reflected on the reflecting film and transmits through the transparent substrate. In other words, a back light is not used in this liquid crystal apparatus. Therefore, this liquid crystal apparatus is characterized in that the power consumption is low and the service life is long. Although this liquid crystal apparatus can be applied to a reflection type liquid crystal apparatus and a transmission type liquid crystal apparatus, it is limited to use as a transreflective liquid crystal apparatus, therefore the productivity thereof is poor. In general, a reflection type liquid crystal apparatus is superior to a transmission type liquid crystal apparatus in that it can be downsized. However, the contrast ratio of a reflection type liquid crystal apparatus is inferior to that of a transmission type liquid crystal apparatus. Spatial perspective taking: pointing tasks in chimpanzees (Pan troglodytes). Humans not only often anticipate the spatial perspective of others but also temporally predict their actions. As animals have often been considered to lack a full understanding of temporally extended actions, we present the first evidence for temporal
