The type II BMP receptor ACVR2B mediates chondrocyte regulation of matrix mineralization.

Matrix mineralization is an early hallmark of hypertrophic differentiation of growth plate chondrocytes. We determined that, in addition to TGF-beta1, BMP4 is a key regulator of matrix mineralization, and we explored the pathway mediating BMP4 function. BMP4 stimulated matrix mineralization of growth plate chondrocytes via ACVR2B but not ACVR2A or BMPRI1A. Conditional deletion of ACVR2B in growth plate chondrocytes delayed mineralization and reduced expression of markers of chondrocyte hypertrophy, and overexpression of ACVR2B stimulated mineralization and increased expression of growth plate hypertrophy markers. Furthermore, ACVR2B blocked the effects of TGF-beta1 on growth plate chondrocytes, including inhibition of mineralization. These data reveal a novel role for ACVR2B in the process of mineralization and provide a mechanism for the regulation of extracellular matrix mineralization by TGF-beta signaling. In addition, two small studies \[[@CR9], [@CR10]\] have shown that CMF adjuvant therapy produced favourable outcomes in completely node-negative patients, whereas not so in those with node-positive disease. The present study indicates that the effect of the 'no-CS' group was reversed in the node-positive group, suggesting that the optimal adjuvant therapies for BC in the node-positive group have not been determined. Further prospective randomised controlled studies should be performed to investigate the ideal adjuvant therapies and predict outcomes in node-positive patients. Breast cancer is a heterogeneous disease and a large number of prognostic factors have been identified. In the present study, the hormone receptor status, age, tumour size, histologic grade and menopausal status were independent prognostic factors in BC patients. Multivariate analysis showed that only surgery was an independent prognostic factor for OS. Whereas, adjuvant CSF had no effect on the survival of node-negative patients. Multivariate analysis showed that CSF may be an independent prognostic factor in BC patients with positive axillary nodes. In contrast, adjuvant CSF was not significantly associated with OS or recurrence-free survival in node-positive BC patients, which may be due to the small sample size or other reasons. The better efficacy of CSF in node-negative BC patients may be due to local treatment, such as radiotherapy and CMF, when the pathologic nodal status was negative or unclear. Further evaluation is required to confirm the existence of this phenomenon. Conclusion {#Sec15} =====

This study indicated that the effects of the combination of local treatment with CSF were not associated with an improved survival rate in BC patients with positive axillary nodes.
