This article describes the care received by the health of the community and the living conditions of its population. The study was done in an underprivileged community in São Paulo city, using analytical and descriptive approach. Data were collected in interviews, observation and document review, and analyzed by tabulation and by inferential statistics. The health care sought by the community was access to public health services, and the principal causes of morbidity and mortality were infectious and obstetric, circulatory and nutritional. During the study period, 42% of the pregnant women did not attend the prenatal consultations, and 14% of newborns died. Nevertheless, the infant mortality rate has been cut in half, from 33.3 per 1000 live births in 2000 to 18.4 in 2013. The community showed a low rate of vaccination. The strategies aiming the strengthening of the health system, promoting the strengthening of community participation in the search for health and the construction of the social life of the community should be developed, along with the improvement of educational, sanitation and nutritional conditions.Q: Parsing JSON data from the Internet - what is the best practice? I'm building my first Android application. I am using the JSON library in the android dev website, however the following code does not work for the following reason: I am able to successfully get the JSON feed on a web browser in the address bar. However, when i place this as a String into the code above, its not getting the data from the internet. Below is the code for the feed: InputStream is = null; String result = null; String myUrl = ""; protected void onPostExecute(String file_url) { // dismiss the dialog pDialog.dismiss(); // displays the results into the textview try { // reading the results into the string

To my understanding one session is used per connection. If the connection is closed, the session is invalidated automatically. I have a question. How is the JDBC connection handled in Hive? Is a new connection opened for every query? The same sql is executed against different tables at the same time in the same session? Or is it reused
