This study evaluates the ability of blood (plasma and whole blood) to clot on glass and cultured endothelial cells (ECs) coated with fibrinogen, forming fibrin and fibrinogen fiber matrices. Clot retraction onto glass/fibrinogen was highly susceptible to clot initiation time and in the presence of whole blood less affected. Clot retraction on glass was less susceptible to clot initiation time. Using a modification of Driggers' method, we demonstrate that fibrin-fiber matrices alone undergo shape changes upon polymerization as soon as within the first 30 s. We also observed erythrocyte lysis on ECs during clot retraction, which was unaffected by the presence of fibrinogen. These findings illustrate the need for caution when using glass and ECs to evaluate clot retraction.The polyamines spermidine and spermine regulate c-Src and GAPDH in Rat-1 cells. Polyamines, such as spermidine and spermine, regulate c-Src in Rat-1 cells; however, the details of their effects on Src, GAPDH, and other Src substrates are unclear. In this paper, we show that spermidine and spermine regulated phosphorylation of c-Src at
