Urine samples were tested for opium, morphine, codeine and 6-acetylmorphine by means of thin-layer and high-performance liquid chromatography.

Samples were prepared by the same procedure used for plasma samples. The chromatographic conditions are presented. The limit of detection for morphine is 5 ng/ml and for 6-acetylmorphine 0.3 ng/ml. The detection limit for opium is 10 ng/ml and for codeine 15 ng/ml. Recoveries were in the range 50-110% for all the analytes. The method was applied to urine of narcotic addicts who admitted to have consumed opiates. Typical results are presented. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a sheet selecting apparatus for selecting sheets one by one from a sheet stack. 2. Description of the Related Art Sheet transport apparatuses have been used for sorting sheets such as checks, receipts, and bills of currency based on the type of paper, number, and the like. Such sheet transport apparatuses are used for processing sheets before they are outputted to an image-forming apparatus (see, for example, Japanese Patent Laid-Open No. 5-211473). Generally, a sheet transport apparatus is mounted in a sheet tray and is formed by a large number of mechanisms. The sheet tray has a lid plate with a large number of sheet feed ports for feeding one sheet at a time. The apparatus has an intake mechanism that separates and feeds the sheets one by one from the sheet tray. An ejection mechanism ejects, from the apparatus, one sheet at a time for each image forming cycle. A gate mechanism opens or closes the sheet feed port. A transport path is formed by a transport guide for guiding the sheet through the sheet tray and the intake mechanism.

The sheet transport apparatus is connected to a sorter or the like which is constructed to perform image formation on a sheet. The image formation is performed by an image forming apparatus. The image forming apparatus forms images on sheets fed from the sheet transport apparatus and then transports the sheets through a transport path, on which the sheets are sequentially processed for
