Field of the Invention This invention relates to control systems for continuous coal burning stoves, and more particularly to a system for automatically sequencing the operation of such stoves. 2. Description of the Prior Art The use of coal stoves for heating is a well known and widely practiced technique. In common form the coal burner is utilized to produce heat and to provide for ventilation to the room within which the stove is positioned. A primary advantage of coal stoves, especially in cold weather, is the ability of the user to sense when the stove has been adequately preheated and to stop and extinguish the fire at the conclusion of a short period of time. Frequently, however, it is also desirable to continue heating after the fire has been extinguished. In order to effect this continued heating, the operator of a coal stove is required to interrupt the flow of fuel to the d0c515b9f4
