What's New in the?

"Let us not pray to be defended from our enemies, but to be defended from our friends," said diplomat, Historian and Gentleman, Isaac Alexander. "Let us not pray to be defended from our foes, but to be defended from our brothers," added political philosopher and Author, Richard Baxter. New York, May 4th, 1744. A certain British General, lately arrived from Philadelphia, and one of the Regency, on a visit here, boasting of his force and success, having marched his army into that city the day before yesterday, not at all thinking of the many discontented subjects, who were held prisoners in the city, took occasion to say, that were he living in Britain, he would not countenance such an act of unprovoked brutality. Isaac Alexander, Historian, and Gentleman, was much more struck with a speech made by a certain Priest in his neighborhood, and asked if it were not too severe a reflection upon the Government of Great-Britain. "I presume," said the Priest, "that the members of the Convention at Philadelphia, will not be reproached with the deed, which has produced such indignation in many of the loyalists here." "True," replied Mr. Alexander, "but they will be reproached with the fault of ill-doing it; and if they had stayed and defended the city, it would have been in their power to have taken the whole, and sent them with chains and other sureties from the city, instead of which they have broken their oath of allegiance, and robbed the loyalists of the mercy of the law." Mr. Alexander tells us, he asked the Priest, if he knew him to be a loyalist? The reply was, "Yes, very, very much so." "Well," said Mr. Alexander, "and can you think, Sir, that an American, born and brought up in the faith of the same country, and to whom the alliance between the English and Americans was always professed and expected to be of the last consequence, can have any other opinion than that of loyalty, and that his country is the last object of his heart and his arms, and that he will do all in his power to preserve it, even to the last extremity?" "He was obliged to say, Sir, that he did not believe it." This seemed a pretty clear intimation, that he did not believe it.
