Banksy is getting a little bit angry with the police in his home country of England. He's repurposed his famous stenciled images into a series of images depicting the dangers of boiling water in your home. Each of the works, on display for the first time in the UK, can be seen at Camden Arts Center in London. The images were first posted on Facebook last week with the title "Hot Topic." There are four different pieces in all, each featuring stenciled images of a boiling kettle, burning candle, burning gas line and erupting water main. All were spraypainted on metal fences and plastic sheeting in an alley off Kingsland Road in Camden. A spokesman for the Camden Arts Center told IBTimes UK that the works were commissioned by an artists' group. Banksy, however, may not have approved the final version of the works. A source told the Guardian newspaper that the works that had "his" name on them had been tampered with by an unknown vandal, who had changed the street name from Kingsland Road to Kingsland High Road. Also on display at the Camden Arts Center are three work by fellow artist Murakami Takashi, a former student of the Royal College of Art. His works there include murals of women in

I recommend trying to see as much as you can whilst in Rotherhithe, no matter how long you are planning to stay or where you are staying, it is an absolute must. The Saatchi Gallery is free to enter and is so amazing. see for yourself. Every night the huge billboard that overlooks the Thames & London Eye is lit up with art, and displays original work from artists world wide, so you can see some amazing views whilst watching a beautiful piece of art. 10. West London Hotels There are hotels in West London, ranging from budget to top of the range hotels, with everything in between. Our home for the past four years, we have stayed in a variety of hotels, from being located in The West London which we loved as a guest, right through to staying in Kensington at the ever popular Hilton, giving us a taste of both. Throughout the years, we have stayed in many, many different hotels in West London, from traditional, hotels right through to boutique hotels, our favourite being the 4-star Danieli. We have stayed at hotels with amazing views, hotels that have amazing service and everything in-between, and we have come to the conclusion that there is something for everyone no matter where you stay. We would recommend staying in East to West London, as the West London is a much newer part of the capital and for those wanting to stay in the better class of hotels, choosing West London will be a
