Voice Trap V20 Crack is a very famous application in the world of.Q: Set sqlite database to persistent during app runtime I have an app that allows the user to add and remove items from a database. I would like to create a persistent/unique database so that if the app is reinstalled or moved to another state, the database will still function the same. How can I do this? I have seen this question but it is for the case where the database lives on the user's phone. I'm more interested in the case where the database lives on an SQLite file that lives on the same app bundle. (I.e. no data is saved to the user's phone, but the app can come back in later after a phone restart or state change, in which case a new DB will be created). A: This isn't possible. With an SQLite database file you can't be sure if it's going to exist on the next app launch. It also relies on the file not being moved or deleted. See more information on this over here: You can use databases for data storage, but if you intend to store anything related to the app being installed (i.e. the current item count, etc) you'll have to implement your own caching.
